CURIOUS TELEPHONES.

Two of Them which Puzzled the Tele phone Experts-New Method Intreduced for Eliminating Induction.

Possibilities of the Telephone Service-A Mint for the Man that Can Discover the Secret.

Kansas City Times.

There has been recently introduced into the telephone exchange here a new piece of apparatus for eleminating inductions, which promises valuable results. Almost everyone who has used a telephone has noticed that he could often hear other conversation passing over other wires, and telegraph instruments clicking in such vast numbers that the result would be a perfect clatter that is frequently so loud as to be very annoying. It is caused by electric currents inducted in the wire by other currents in other wires passing near it. The wires need not be in contact, only in proximity with each other.

It is generally known that if the wire could be carried from one telephone to the other, and then back to the starting point, that this troublesome induction would be entirely obviated, for the inducted currents would be equally strong in all parts of the wire, and as they would oppose each other, they would both be destroyed.

versations are reported at the coils and each goes to its proper telephone without interference from the other.
